CAPTAIN JOHN SMITH, 1580-1631

A review by EDGAR PACKARD DEAN, of Brockton, Mass.

Of the three worlds of Captain John Smith (1580-1631) the first was that of a soldier of fortune in the Hungarian army fighting against the Turks.

The second was the Virginia colony. Smith was a member of the original group that left England for Jamestown in 1606. Hard-headed and hard-working, it was he who kept the settlement together and insured its continuity.

The third world was New England. In the summer of 1614 he sailed along the coast from Monhegan Island to Cape Cod and made a surprisingly accurate map of the coastline, which was a part of his book printed two years later, A Description of New England. Thereafter Smith became a one-man promotion agency for the colonization of New England. In 1620 he wanted to lead the Pilgrim expedition, but the Pilgrims were determined to be their own masters. They took with them Smith's book and map but not the man himself. Instead, they hired another soldier of fortune, Miles Standish, who—in the modern idiom—fitted better as “a member of the team.” If in December 1620 the Pilgrims settled permanently in Plymouth, one reason was the fact that Plymouth was a name and a place on a map—John Smith’s map.

The Three Worlds of Captain John Smith by Philip L. Barbour (Boston, Houghton, Mifflin, 1964, 553 p., $7.50) is eminently readable. One can regret that Smith’s map of New England is not reproduced: it is a good map, highly informative, and not too easy to come by. Notwithstanding, the book is a satisfactory biography of a vigorous champion of the New World, worth the while of anyone who is interested in the first settlement of New England and Virginia.
